

KRAFTWERK BERLIN

At the centre of Berlin, on the Köpenicker Straße, is the former power station Mitte – a piece of Berlins industrial history. Built approximately at the same time as the Berlin Wall during the years 1960-1964, its purpose was to power the former East German regions of Berlin. After the building stood abandoned for many years, it was resurrected by Dimitri Hegemann in 2006 and part of the space reopened as his techno club Tresor. Today, this formerly silenced Berlin power station is a vibrant place for art and culture.

A space resonating with energy.
