HOW IT ALL BEGAN

HOW IT ALL BEGAN

- Built in 1890 as a factory chapel and ballroom for the C. Bolle dairy
- Founded by entrepreneur Carl Julius Andreas Bolle
- Inaugurated in 1893 by the last German empress, Augusta Victoria
- Used as a margarine production hall, temporary church, cinema and theatre

The BOLLE Festsäle are a living testimony of Berlin's first big economic boom. Built in the slipstream of the industrial era and inaugurated in 1893 before Augusta Victoria, the last German empress, these event spaces are marked by the entrepreneurial spirit and grandeur of those times. They exude a sense of vision, values being put into practice and unmistakable solidity. Ceilings up to eight metres high, bare brick walls, tall steel-framed windows, cast-iron pillars and the attention to detail radiating from every corner of this listed building make them a classic example of Berlin's industrial architecture.

NEW ADDITIONS ROOF AND BAR

BOLLE TODAY

- One of Berlin's most impressive event spaces
- Underwent extensive renovation in 2013/14 in line with strict conservation requirements
- Cinema projection room converted into BOLLE Milk Bar
- Premium technical facilities, roof terrace extension

The newly extended roof terrace and the former film projection room converted into BOLLE Milk Bar are two new highlights. The event spaces are still shaped by their namesake's entrepreneurial spirit, while being restored and brought thoroughly up to date. As part of the Spree-Bogen area with its real estate, health centre, the hotels ABION HOTEL AMERON SPREEBOGEN WATERSIDE and boutique hotel AMERON VILLA, the BOLLE Festsäle combine the very best of two different eras into a wonderful whole – from the industrial to the Internet age. Berlin industrial architecture.
